

Apostrophe S practice! (apostrophe of ownership!)

Put the apostrophe of possession where it is required in the following passage.

Judys joy knew no bounds when she was told that her father had planned an afternoons visit to the circus for her.

After an hours trip by car Judy and her father had reached the site of Smithsons Circus and were ready to enjoy the show.

A trumpets blast heralded the Animals Grand Parade. How the crowd cheered the tricks of the performing dogs, the elephants act and the intelligent movements of the six Arabian horses.

When the clowns antics followed, the spectators laughter was deafening. The climax of the show was yet to come. This was when the trapeze artists skill thrilled all onlookers.

At last the troupes entertainment was over. It was evident from the faces of the men and women and from the childrens happy laughter that the circus had been great fun for all.
